"These murders cannot be washed away, not forgotten" The favorite of the Soviet pioneers became a maniac. He hung students and made films about it

Cycle From hell

Lenta.ru continues its cycle of publications about maniacs who have written their name into the criminal history of the USSR and new Russia. Their crimes made the country shudder. In a previous article , we talked about Vladimir Ionesyan, nicknamed Mosgaz, who shocked Moscow with his murders in the winter of 1963-1964. Today our story is about Anatoly Slivko, nicknamed the Honored Torturer. He created a tourist club for schoolchildren in Nevinnomyssk, Stavropol, and became a real star of the city. But while adults admired his talents as a teacher, Slivko conducted horrific experiments with their children, which he filmed. According to the operatives, even during the investigation they were terribly anxious to shoot Slivko, but in 1989 he received his bullet from the executioner...

Blood on black boots

Anatoly Slivko was born on December 28, 1938 in the young city of Izberbash (Dagestan ASSR). The city itself was founded in 1931 on the site of a developing oil field - and at the time of childhood, Slivko could not boast of great comfort for life. Anatoly lived with his father, mother and older brother Andrei, while his parents constantly cursed: their quarrels began even before the birth of their youngest son.

After another scandal, Slivko's mother, while still pregnant with him, tried to provoke a miscarriage. As a result, the woman had a premature birth, but the doctors managed to save the life of the child. Cream Jr. grew up as a quiet, withdrawn and sickly boy. He had almost no friends among his peers - he eschewed noisy childish companies and preferred to stay at home. There the boy found something to his liking: he began to breed rabbits, which he then slaughtered and skinned himself.

One of Slivko's most vivid childhood memories was during the war years. In 1942, when Anatoly was only four years old, a fascist killed a little boy in front of his eyes, who was trying to protect his dog from a bullet. Later, Slivko admits that he does not remember the very moment of the execution of the child - but the episode, how the fascist wiped the blood from his black boots, polished to a shine, on the body of the child he killed, forever stuck in his memory.

After leaving school, Anatoly Slivko joined the army; the place of his service was the Far East. At this time, Slivko's parents moved to the Stavropol Territory, to the city of Nevinnomyssk, where their son arrived almost immediately after demobilization. In the new city, he quickly settled in - he graduated from the Chemical Technology College and got a job as an operator at a local nitrogen fertilizer plant. True, Slivko dreamed of a completely different career: he wanted to work with children, while he was driven by by no means noble motives.

...Back in 1961, while in the Far East, 23-year-old Anatoly witnessed a terrible picture: a drunken man on a motorcycle crashed into a crowd of walking pioneers, who lost control. Several teenagers were injured, and one of them died on the spot. The sight of the bloodied body of a teenager in black polished boots and a pioneer tie around his neck suddenly caused Slivko sexual arousal - and this shocked him.

True, in the places where he was, at that time there were no psychiatrists, and Slivko did not dare to go to an ordinary doctor. In the end, the inevitable moment came when he allowed his inner beast to break out. It all started with the fact that in 1963 Slivko began to go to the schools of Nevinnomyssk and organize something like extra-curricular circles there, where he told students about the nature of the Far East. Then he got a job as a leader in one of the educational institutions - and began to lead his wards on two-day trips.

At the plant, his educational impulses were encouraged and even allowed to skip shifts. In 1966, the authorities gave Slivko a small building for his tourist club "Romantic" - a wooden building in the city center with an assembly hall and several small rooms. So Slivko got his first pupils of his own - a small group of teenagers whom he led on hikes, taught how to light fires and put up tents. The young teacher told his students a lot about the environment and taught them the basics of survival in the wild.

Cold groom

Slivko was in no hurry to tie the knot - the opposite sex did not interest him at all. He understood this while serving in the army: colleagues often discussed girls, but Anatoly himself remained absolutely indifferent to such conversations. However, in order not to stand out from the background of his comrades, Slivko nevertheless started a relationship with a girl who lived not far from his unit.

True, this brought him only irritation and disappointment: the chosen one soon announced her pregnancy and, threatening to tell the command of the unit about their connection, demanded a speedy marriage. But Slivko was not afraid of blackmail - he simply stopped communicating with his mistress.

Simultaneously with this novel, the young soldier corresponded with a classmate whom he met at school, who even waited for his demobilization. But immediately after meeting with the girl, Slivko decided to break off this relationship: he was shocked by the revelations of an old friend about her abortion. After that, Anatoly began to shun women, but then his mother intervened in his personal life, worried about her son's loneliness. And in order not to upset her, he decided to marry.

Slivko's future wife, Lyudmila, worked at the same chemical plant as he did. By the time their relationship began, Anatoly was 29 years old. After a short courtship, Slivko made an offer to Lyudmila, which she gladly accepted. The girl was not at all alarmed that on dates the future husband did not make a single attempt to hug or kiss her. On the contrary, Lyudmila reasoned that such behavior speaks of the exceptional decency and seriousness of her chosen one's intentions.

But already on the wedding night, it turned out that Slivko had obvious problems in sexual terms - as an object of passion, Lyudmila did not interest him at all. Nevertheless, he treated his wife with great respect and never offended her. Regarding problems in intimate life, Slivko went to the doctor - but the doctor only brushed it aside and advised him to rest more. And when the nurse present at the reception began to giggle, the patient became very embarrassed and decided not to continue talking about his problems.

However, they did not prevent Slivko and his wife from having two sons. After the birth of the youngest, he moved to live in the next room, finally putting an end to his sexual relationship with Lyudmila. Slivko himself was pleased with the status of a married man - a stamp in his passport added weight to him in society and inspired confidence.

Time of "Chergid"

In 1968, in the building where the tourist club "Romantic" was based, there was a fire - it burned to the ground. Then the members of the tourist club moved to a new place - to the Palace of Chemists. A new tourist club "Chergid" arose there - the abbreviation meant "through rivers, mountains and valleys." He quickly became famous in Nevinnomyssk because of his military-patriotic work. Slivko himself studied all the places of battles in the vicinity, under his leadership, veterans were raised to the mountains, to the famous Marukh Pass, who told about their military past there.

In addition, Slivko significantly expanded the collection of exhibits of the Museum of Military Glory, which existed in the Palace of Chemists even before the appearance of Chergid. The head of the club traveled to Bulgaria and Japan, where he shared his experience with local tourists. For his active work, Slivko, who did not have any higher education, received the title of Honored Teacher of the RSFSR - the secretary of the city party organization, who idolized his countryman, tried hard. Soon "Chergid" began to receive good funding from local authorities.

And Slivko came up with a system to encourage young "Chergidovites", the number of which by that time had exceeded 200 people. In addition to awarding the members of the club with “Young Tourist” badges, the head introduced a system of points: their schoolchildren received for the work performed during the trips - getting firewood and water, correctly and quickly lighting a fire, peeling potatoes for stew, and so on. Later, the points were converted into money that Slivko gave out to his wards. Often they also received sweets from their leader, which raised his authority in their eyes higher and higher.

Slivko was also very fond of filming: the Quartz movie camera was presented to him in the army - for successful service. At first, Anatoly fixed everything on her and taught the children how to handle her. And then Slivko decided to put the camera at the service of his vices - and shoot on it a semblance of the incident with the death of a pioneer that had so excited him. Moreover, the "actors" in his terrible productions were supposed to be members of the tourist club "Chergid".

hanging game

The "plot" was simple - a teenager dressed in a pioneer uniform before filming and always wore black shoes. After that, he climbed onto a makeshift gallows, put his head into the noose and hung like that for a while. In another scenario, the student put cellophane or a gas mask with ether over his head, after which he was unconscious for several minutes. Slivko found an explanation for his desire to hang during the investigation - he remembered that in his childhood, while playing partisans, friends hung him on a tree. The future maniac survived only by a miracle and seemed to have forgotten about the incident. However, he firmly sat down in his subconscious.

Initially, Slivko did not plan to kill children: in medical manuals, he carefully studied the steps for resuscitation during suffocation. In order to lull the vigilance of schoolchildren, the maniac each time came up with a convincing "legend" for them. For example, Slivko told them about conducting medical experiments to develop effective resuscitation measures.

Those who agreed to climb into the loop on the "experiment", the maniac, among other things, convinced that this test would give them important experience that could be useful in the future when saving loved ones. But there were also those who refused Slivko's dubious adventures, to which he reacted calmly and left those who refused alone.

From each pioneer who agreed to the “experiment”, his cunning leader took a receipt that participation in the production was voluntary. Schoolchildren wrote under Slivko's dictation:

“Being in sober health and without any coercion, I agreed to conduct a medical experiment with inducing loss of consciousness. I swear to keep the fact of participation in the experiment, as well as its results, in complete secrecy and never tell anyone under any circumstances.

Many of the victims of the maniac as a result of asphyxia in the "experiments" briefly lost their memory - like himself in his time. So that schoolchildren would not talk too much, in addition to the receipt, Slivko coaxed them with money: he could give a teenager 25-30 rubles for an "experiment" - at that time, the monthly salary of a kindergarten teacher.

Under the mask of Tolik

Slivko himself told his victims that their participation in perverted "experiments" was a "feat." Pulling a plastic bag over the head of another teenager, the maniac explained: he wants to make sure that a schoolboy can survive in oxygen deficiency if an avalanche covers him somewhere in the mountains. Another victim - a boy who had complexes about his short stature - Slivko said: while he hangs suspended, his vertebrae will stretch and he will grow. Thanks to such constant psychological processing, the victims at the hands of a pervert did not even have the thought that they were participating in something illegal.

Slivko told other children that he was writing a book about the Great Patriotic War and, for illustration, he needed a snapshot of the moment when the Nazis hanged a pioneer who helped the partisans. Another legend of the maniac was allegedly shooting a feature film with the same plot. This invention was a particular success - gullible schoolchildren were eager to become screen stars to such an extent that at the “screen tests” they were not at all afraid of the prospect of truly being on the gallows.

The parents of the young participants of "Chergid" did not even suspect about the horrors that Slivko secretly creates with their children. On the contrary, they actively encouraged the boys' interest in the tourist club: at that time, Nevinnomyssk could not boast of an abundance of various sections. Against this background, "Chergid" was something incredible - gatherings, excursions with an overnight stay in tents, overcoming mountain obstacles, crossing rivers on ropes, searching for each other in the dark by flashing lanterns, gatherings by the fire with eating scarce condensed milk ...

Strengthened the trust of adults in the head of "Chergid" and the excellent reviews of the schoolchildren themselves. They were delighted with both the trips and their leader - the experienced tourist Tolik, as Slivko himself asked teenagers to call himself, knew a lot of interesting things. Meanwhile, for Tolik, the moment came when he finally crossed the line between good and evil - and began to kill his pupils one by one.

damn path

According to the investigation, the first blood appeared on the hands of a maniac in 1964, when 15-year-old Kolya Dobryshev disappeared in Nevinnomyssk. Then Slivko did not have tourist clubs yet - the teenager liked him during lectures at schools. Maniac invited Dobryshev to participate in the first "experiment", which ended in the death of a schoolboy. Slivko tried to revive Kolya, but it was too late - he hung in the noose for too long. Then the maniac dismembered his victim and threw the remains into the waters of the Kuban River.

The deceased young man was from a dysfunctional family - his mother did not even immediately notice the disappearance of her son. Investigations also came to nothing. Meanwhile, almost ten years passed before the next murder of Slivko: all these years the maniac continued to strangle and reanimate his victims. And in 1973, 15-year-old Sasha Nesmeyanov, a pupil of Chergid, suddenly disappeared in Nevinnomyssk: Slivko committed this murder, as well as subsequent ones, on purpose. Shortly before the disappearance, the teenager began to grow his hair, which did not go unnoticed by the teacher at school.

She turned to Sasha's mother and demanded that she cut her son's hair. The woman spoke to the teenager that same evening; he confided in his mother and said that he was preparing for the filming of the film - but asked to keep it a secret. However, the mother nevertheless gave the teacher the story of her son - as it turned out, in vain. The teacher in front of the whole class began to mock the student: they say, look what kind of artist we found. Sasha harbored a terrible grudge against his mother and left home. Nobody saw him alive again.

The search for the teenager in the framework of the criminal case initiated by the investigators was not crowned with success. For several years, Sasha's mother herself made attempts to find her son, traveled to several cities - from Minsk to Arkhangelsk, turned to various authorities, but in vain - the child seemed to have sunk into the water. Even the photographs of Sasha, shown on central television, did not help. True, one of the prisoners suddenly confessed to the murder of a teenager and even indicated the place where he buried the boy - one of the islands on the Kuban River. But it soon became clear that the convict was lying: he just wanted to unwind a little and go to an investigative experiment in Nevinnomyssk.

Meanwhile, Anatoly Slivko himself provided the investigation with a photograph of Nesmeyanov, who tried to portray the most direct participation and concern for the fate of the Chergid pupil. When Nesmeyanov's mother turned to Slivko for information about her son, Anatoly convinced the woman that he did not know where Sasha was. The head of "Chergid" said that he was very surprised why the law enforcement officers did not immediately come to him. Slivko kept silent about the fact that he personally hanged Nesmeyanov, and then dismembered and buried the body.

Secrets at the bottom

The next child disappeared in Nevinnomyssk two years later - in 1975: then 11-year-old "Chergid" Andrey Pogosyan did not return home. The schoolboy's parents knew that on that day the boy was going to the Don Forest to shoot a film - he himself informed them about this and asked them to buy new swimming trunks. But for some reason, Poghosyan's father and mother not only did not bother to find out the name of the "director", but calmly let the child go alone. And the policemen, who accepted the statement and started searching for the boy, did not even think to connect the disappearance of Poghosyan with the disappearance of Sasha Nesmeyanov.

The next day, Andrei's briefcase and personal belongings were found on the city embankment - Slivko threw them there in the hope that the child's death would be recognized as an accident. It turned out almost as the maniac had hoped - divers carefully combed the bottom of the Kuban River, but Pogosyan's body was not found. In the end, the case was closed. And in 1980, Slivko killed his next victim - 13-year-old Serezha Fatnev.

This time, the maniac himself took an active part in the search for the missing schoolboy to avert his eyes - he went around the neighborhood and interviewed local residents. Slivko even talked with Fatnev's parents: they turned to the head of the tourist club immediately after the disappearance of their son. The maniac calmly told the boy's father and mother that he did not know where the schoolboy had gone; at the same time, Slivko knew perfectly well that his parents would never see Serezha alive again.

After this story, the maniac continued to kill: in subsequent years, at least two more boys died at his hands, whose deaths Slivko habitually recorded with a video camera. He cut the throats of the victims, smeared the corpses with blood - and continued the terrible shooting.

On the trail of the beast

In July 1985, the mother and sister of the last, seventh victim of Slivko, 13-year-old Serezha Pavlov, who lived in one of the houses on Mira Boulevard, turned to the police. Relatives of the boy said that he went fishing on the Kuban River and did not return. True, Pavlov did not take his fishing rods that day for some reason.

The investigation considered several versions of the disappearance of the student. Even Serezha's mother was suspected: for some reason, she did not show much emotion after the disappearance of her son and remained restrained. The detectives did not exclude the possibility that Pavlov could accidentally drown. But the truth eventually shocked everyone - it was told by Serezha's neighbor. Before disappearing, the boy told her good news for him: the head of the tourist club, Anatoly Slivko, would photograph him for the magazine.

... When the detectives came to the tourist club "Chergid" to talk with its head, it was already too late: Slivko, together with the pupils, went to the sea. As the maniac himself later tells, during this trip he unsuccessfully tried to commit suicide - his conscience ate him. In the meantime, Slivko was absent from the city, the investigator in charge of Serezha Pavlov's case went on vacation and handed him over to the prosecutor's assistant, Tamara Langueva.

It was thanks to this woman that the investigation finally got off the ground. Taking advantage of Slivko's absence, Langueva began to scrupulously interrogate all the participants of the tourist club. They were reluctant to be frank, but nevertheless told Langueva some details about the filming of the movie by their mentor.

Terrible revelations

As it turned out, Anatoly Slivko swung at almost feature films: he shot some fairy tales about Baba Yaga, fascists, Indians ... But most importantly, according to the script, the characters often went to the gallows. And suddenly, during another conversation, one of the boys confessed to Tamara Langueva - at the suggestion of Anatoly, he really hung in the noose for six minutes, but he doesn't know how he survived.

News of injection molding

According to the student, after being hung up, he lost consciousness, and when he came to, he found that he had difficulty breathing, his tongue was very swollen and he could not walk on his own. Slivko brought the schoolboy home and disappeared, and the boy himself explained to his worried parents that a caterpillar had bitten him in the tongue.

There were no obvious signs of strangulation on the student's neck - for this, the maniac wrapped a soft towel around a rubber hose loop, and only then put it on the children. However, later, the miraculously surviving boy nevertheless shared his disturbing memories with his girlfriend - and she told her parents about the strange story. But they did not believe her, and the story itself was considered the fruit of a child's fantasy.

As a result, the assistant prosecutor Languev got to the bottom of the terrible truth: when the head of Chergid personally called one, specific child to “film shooting”, then for the young actor this usually meant certain death - after all, he hung in a noose for 10-15 minutes. Already during the investigation, it turns out that the maniac dismembered and buried the bodies, and burned the bloody clothes. In addition, before getting rid of the next corpse, Slivko liked to douse with gasoline and set fire to the shoes worn on the feet of dead boys - the sight of burning shoes gave him perverse sexual pleasure.

For 20 years, such a terrible death befell seven schoolchildren. Another 43 teenagers went through strangulation, but survived: Slivko stopped the torture no later than nine minutes after it began, and resuscitated another victim with his own hands.

"You will regret it"

The serial killer was detained on December 28, 1985 at the Chergid tourist club, which by that time had moved to a new building on Severnaya Street. The arrest took place on the birthday of Slivko, who turned 47 years old. When the operatives put handcuffs on the detainee, he was terribly indignant and reminded them that they had seized the deputy of the Nevinnomyssk City Council, a shock worker and master of sports in mountain tourism. Slivko threatened the operatives with his connections in the City Committee and threw them the phrase: "You will regret it."

True, during the search, Slivko quickly wilted when he saw how one of the operatives went to the room with the inscription "Shield": the suspect tried to declare that it was dangerous to go there, and he did not have the keys to the utility room. But the policeman got there anyway - and saw a strange picture: helmets of German and Soviet soldiers, weapons, grenades, pioneer ties, uniforms and badges lay on the floor in a chaotic manner - as a result, material evidence was accumulated on a whole truck.

Among them were the shoes of some of the dead schoolchildren - for unknown reasons, Slivko sawed off the toes of the shoes (sometimes right on the bodies of the dead) and kept both parts. There were also stumps in the shield room, on which a maniac dismembered teenagers in the forest, sometimes still alive. All these terrible objects reminded Slivko of the murders he had committed - and these memories gave him pleasure.

Last letter

However, the operatives experienced the greatest shock when they looked at the photographs and one of the videotapes that Slivko carefully kept in Shchitovaya - the footage showed a boy in a pioneer uniform hanging in a noose. According to the memoirs of one of the employees of the criminal investigation department, at that moment he even had the idea to use his service weapon and shoot Slivko, who was nearby - he restrained this impulse with great difficulty.

The detectives also found the maniac's diary, in which he, among other things, wrote that he sometimes tried to overcome his thirst for murder and use dolls instead of children. But time after time, Slivko's desire to satisfy his perverted passions turned out to be stronger. His wife, after the first interrogation of her husband, left the city: the police, fearing reprisals from local residents, put the woman and her sons on a train under cover of night.

The maniac himself, already in jail , wrote a farewell letter to his wife - in it, in addition to apologies, he claimed that his mental pathology was congenital, indicated a number of its symptoms and asked to carefully monitor his sons as they grow up. While under arrest, Slivko tried to commit suicide twice - but to no avail. And the secretary of the city party organization, with the filing of which the maniac received the title of "Honored Teacher", could not survive the terrible news about her protégé and committed suicide.

"Only with death leaves"

During the first interrogations, Slivko remained silent for the most part. Then he talked a little - but indicated Sasha Nesmeyanov as his first victim, keeping silent about the massacre of Kolya Dobryshev. And then, to the question of Tamara Langueva about the number of victims, he suddenly confessed - they say, yes, I have a lot of them. And he asked before showing the video in court:

"I expressed my wishes to the investigators that the circle should be as narrow as possible. What will be presented now, even the human race is a disgrace. I saw it once, and it can neither be washed away nor forgotten. It only leaves with death. I'm scared that people will watch it."

At the investigation stage, the parents of the murdered schoolchildren had to go through all the circles of hell: not everyone could identify the remains lying in the ground - and then the investigators decided to show the relatives the recordings from Slivko's camera. Fathers and mothers had to watch terrible footage of a maniac cracking down on their children. Near the building where the trial of Slivko was taking place, ambulances were on duty - they were taken to hospitals by relatives of the victims, who lost consciousness from the terrible details of the maniac's crimes. Behind him in Nevinnomyssk, the nicknames of the Counselor-Ripper and the Honored Torturer stuck.

By June 1986, when the trial began, Anatoly Slivko was little like that brave and self-confident leader of the tourist club, who was idolized in the city and taken as an example by schoolchildren. The emaciated and haggard maniac, with trembling hands and head, silently listened to the arguments of the prosecution, knowing full well what kind of sentence he was facing. A psychiatric examination recognized Slivko as sane, but with a whole "bouquet" of deviations - from pedophilia, necrophilia and sadism to fetishism and pyromania.

After the verdict, the convicted maniac lived for another three years. During this time, doctors managed to work with him to create a portrait of a psychopath. Slivko even advised the investigator on the case of the maniac raging in those years Andrei Chikatilo . However, despite their general penchant for sadism, Slivko was never able to correctly predict a single step of the main maniac of the USSR.

Anatoly Slivko was shot in September 1989. Club "Chergid" after the detention of its leader actually ceased to exist. But the room he occupied is not empty. Now there is a Center for Children and Youth Tourism and Excursions.
